Kyczy Hawk was born in 1844 in the Black Hills of South Dakota. She was a member of the Lakota Sioux tribe, and her name means "Little Hawk." Kyczy Hawk's childhood was spent learning the traditional ways of her people. She learned how to hunt, fish, and gather food. She also learned how to make clothing, tools, and weapons. Kyczy Hawk was a skilled craftswoman, and her work was highly respected by her community.

When Kyczy Hawk was in her early twenties, she married a man named Black Elk. The couple had four children together. Kyczy Hawk and her family lived a traditional Lakota life. They hunted buffalo, gathered berries and other plants, and lived in tipis. Kyczy Hawk was also a spiritual leader in her community. She was a Sun Dance dancer, and she had a deep understanding of Lakota spirituality.

In 1876, the Lakota Sioux were defeated by the U.S. Army at the Battle of Little Bighorn. Kyczy Hawk and her family were forced to flee their home. They traveled to Canada, where they lived for several years. In 1889, Kyczy Hawk and her family returned to the United States. They settled on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in South Dakota.

Kyczy Hawk lived on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation for the rest of her life. She continued to practice her traditional Lakota ways, and she became a respected elder in her community. Kyczy Hawk was also a witness to the many hardships that the Lakota Sioux faced during this time. She saw her people suffer from poverty, disease, and discrimination. Kyczy Hawk never gave up hope, however, and she continued to work for the betterment of her people.
